Traditionally, when we have heard the term IQ, it referred primarily to a measurement of individual, personal intelligence. That measurement was then used as an indicator of a person's potential for future success, academically and vocationally. "The New IQ", (INCLUSION QUOTIENT) is a realization that in order for us to reach our their full potential it requires the sum total of the intellect, experiences and ideas of each one of us. That seems at first blush as common sense, but it is difficult because it is not necessarily the way we have been trained to be. It requires behavior that many of us have been programmed to perceive as weakness or insufficiency. INCLUSION requires the ability to honestly listen with an open mind to all and be willing to ask for and accept help. Participants will learn to view others as valuable resources, despite their diverse backgrounds and other differences.

All students and their families are welcome to this special FUSE event.
A free light lunch will be served.
